What affected the Fund's performance this period?

- Positive Stock Selection: Security selection contributed positively to performance relative to the S&P 500 Index. Micron Technology (MU), Microsoft (MSFT), and Caterpillar (CAT) were the largest positive contributors to relative performance from security selection. Advanced Micro Devices (AMD), NetApp (NTAP), and Goldman Sachs (GS) also contributed positively.
- Holdings That Detracted: Positive stock selection was partially offset by negative relative contributions from Palo Alto Networks (PANW), Intuit (INTU), Intuitive Surgical (ISRG), and Applied Materials (AMAT). At the sector level, security selection in communication services and consumer discretionary detracted, while selection in financials, consumer staples, and healthcare contributed positively.
- Sector Allocation: Sector and other allocation effects detracted from performance relative to the S&P 500. The Fund's lower weighting in information technology during the period was the largest sector allocation detractor, despite positive stock selection within that sector. Allocation effects in healthcare and industrials partially offset this drag.
- Covered Call Strategy: The Fund continued writing covered calls on individual equity holdings to generate cash flow alongside portfolio dividends. Option premiums provided a limited cushion against declines in the underlying stocks, while calls limited gains on covered shares when stock prices exceeded their strike prices. Strike prices, expiration dates, and coverage levels were actively managed to seek to balance cash flow generation with participation in equity appreciation.
