What affected the Fund's performance this period?

For the fiscal year ended August 31, 2026, the evolution of artificial intelligence (AI), including increased investment in AI-related technology and infrastructure, influenced market returns, particularly within the Information Technology sector, while conflict in the Middle East contributed to market volatility. Inflation ranged from 2.4% to 4.2% year-over-year, with higher energy prices contributing to elevated readings in the second half of the fiscal year. During the same period, the Federal Reserve reduced the federal funds rate from 4.5% at the start of the fiscal year to 3.75% by December 2025, where it remained through the end of the fiscal year. While the rate reduction was broadly considered supportive of financial markets, its impacts varied across asset classes. According to Bloomberg L.P., the Fund's correlation was 1.00 to the Nasdaq-100 Index.

The Information Technology GICS sector contributed the most to the Fund's total return, gaining over 51%. Within this sector, the Semiconductors & Semiconductor Equipment industry drove most of the returns, gaining over 87% for the year. Additionally, the Consumer Discretionary sector was the second largest contributor, returning over 6% for the period, led by the Consumer Discretionary Distribution & Retail industry, which returned approximately 7%.

Contrarily, the GICS Industrials sector detracted the most from the Fund's total return, losing more than 5% for the year. Within this sector, the Commercial & Professional Services industry detracted the most, losing more than 13%. Additionally, the Real Estate Management & Development industry within the Real Estate sector lost more than 63% for the period.

In terms of specific stock holdings, Micron Technology, Advanced Micro Devices, and Apple were the top three contributors to the total return of the Fund, gaining over 706%, over 189%, and approximately 37%, respectively. Conversely, the top three detractors were Netflix, Meta Platforms, and Intuit, which lost more than 32%, 22%, and 45%, respectively, for the Fund's fiscal year.
